Scenario

You have just been hired at Ohmyfood! as a junior developer. Congratulations!

Ohmyfood! is a young startup that would like to impose itself on the restaurant market. The goal is to develop a 100% mobile site that lists the menus of gourmet restaurants. In addition to the classic reservation systems, customers will be able to compose the menu of their meal so that the dishes are ready when they arrive. No more waiting in restaurants!

You are part of the 4 lucky ones who have the chance to work on this beautiful project.

The team is composed of :

- Paul, the CTO of the future site;

- Fanny, the UX designer recruited to put the site in the colors of Paris;

- Anissa, the sales person in charge of canvassing restaurants;

- and you, in charge of developing the site.

Anissa is in the middle of canvassing restaurants for this project. She calls you at the coffee machine:

Don't you know the new girl? Do you remember the sales manager of your favorite restaurant? I managed to convince him and 3 others to register their cards online! I'll send you the file with the 4 menus in the afternoon. It's up to you now!

You then decide, with the team, that the site will contain 4 menus at first. This is the brief you establish with the CTO, Paul.

Back at your office, you find a post-it note from Fanny.

You find the site mock-ups in your mailbox, sent by Fanny.

You now have all the elements to build this mobile site. You launch into this new adventure!

Deliverables

- A link to your GitHub repository

- A link to the web page of the site

The integration of images from the mock-ups will not be accepted: you must recreate the elements from scratch (titles, text...).

Presentation

The presentation, which lasts 30 minutes, is divided into 3 steps:

1. First, an evaluator will play the role of Paul, your CTO. You will explain your technical choices concerning the design of the site. (15 minutes)

2. You will then answer Paul's questions for 5 to 10 minutes.

3. Finally, your evaluator will resume his role as evaluator for 5 minutes so that you can debrief together.